

ABSTRACT

A method for testing a test component connected to a high-speed electrical component includes connecting a golden optical component to a high-frequency probe, connecting the high-frequency probe to the high-speed electrical component, operating the test component in an application environment to cause a transmission of a high-speed electrical signal from the high-speed electrical component to the golden optical component, and determining if the golden optical component responds to the high-speed electrical signal.